A Message from the Honorable Adélard Godbout, Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec

The truly Christian concept of human relationship is peace on earth and goodwill to all men. Here in the Province of Quebec that concept is given perhaps its best practical expression, for we are privileged to find race and race living together in peace and concord, each holding fast to the finer things in its own tradition, its own culture, its own natural aspirations, while at the same time manifesting an exemplary unity in the safeguarding of the Province's interests and the advancement of her fortunes. You as a racial group are playing your part by making both our official languages your own, and thereby evincing a broadmindedness which never fails to sit well on the really good citizen.

Although there are in the world today nations which, still professing themselves Christian, have stooped to a line of conduct that would shame the veriest heathen, and are practising on weaker peoples a persecution that, far from being dismembled, is actually vaunted for its motive of material gain, here at least will minorities ever have leave to live and aspire as free men.

When you look across the sea to less favoured lands where your racial brethren have been singled out for the worst of the tyrant's wrath, remember that your fellow-citizens, whether of French or English tongue, are one with you in your sorrowing.

In the prodigious effort we are making to preserve for this and coming generations all those finer things of life to which mankind has laboriously, and by suffering and sacrifice, attained through the ages, probably the greatest single success-factor to be found is the unity that prevails amongst our people of different races and creeds. You, Canadian citizens of Jewish race, have not been found wanting in the fight. This province is counting strongly on that good citizenship of yours which characterizes all men of goodwill.

May the Holidays bring you lasting joy and happiness!

ADÉLARD GODBOUT.
Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec.

Message de l'Honorable M. Adélard Godbout, Premier Ministre de la Province de Québec

Paix sur la terre aux hommes de bonne volonté! Voilà le principe qui doit être à la base de toutes les relations humaines. Et c'est bien ici, dans la Province de Québec, que cette loi est le mieux mise en pratique, puisque c'est ici que nous voyons différentes races vivre en harmonie parfaite, chacune gardant bien ses propres traditions, sa propre culture et ses propres aspirations nationales, tout en manifestant un esprit d'unité exemplaire pour la sauvegarde des intérêts et l'accomplissement des destinées de notre province.

En faisant vôtres les deux langues officielles de notre pays, vous faites preuve de la largeur de vues à laquelle on distingue les vrais bons citoyens.

Bien que de nos jours on trouve des peuples qui, même en se réclamant encore du titre de chrétiens, se sont abaissés jusqu'à adopter une ligne de conduite à faire rougir les païens eux-mêmes et se vantent de persécuter les minorités dans un but de gain matériel, ici, tous les groupes minoritaires peuvent vivre en hommes libres.

En jetant un regard par delà les mers, sur vos pays malheureux où tant de vos frères sont déjà les victimes de la fureur du tyran, rappelez-vous qu'ici vos concitoyens, qu'ils soient d'expression française ou anglaise, s'unissent à vous dans votre grande épreuve.

Dans le gigantesque effort que nous faisons pour sauvegarder à la génération présente et à celles qui viendront tous ces avantages que la civilisation nous a donnés et que nous avons obtenus au prix de tant de souffrances et de sacrifices, soupçonne que peut-être le principal gage de succès ne-t-il dû l'unité qui a toujours prévalu parmi notre population composée de races et de croyances diverses.

Quant à vous, citoyens d'origine juive, vous avez voulu faire votre part. C'est pourquoi notre province compte fermement sur le bon esprit qui vous anime et qui est la caractéristique de tous les hommes de bonne volonté.

Puisse le temps des Fêtes vous apporter toute joie et tout bonheur!

ADÉLARD GODBOUT,
Premier ministre de la Province de Québec.

Chanukah And Christmas

It is beautifully symbolic and dramatic that Chanukah this year commences on Christmas eve. This simultaneous observance of the two festivals of lights by Jews and Christians ought to give emphasis to the precious Judaeo-Christian heritage and the need for safeguarding it in these days of totalitarian dark paganism. If ever Jew and Christian had to display unity in defense of common ideals it is certainly today, and happily in all free lands Jews and Christians are rapidly moving towards closer and larger unity.

Chanukah and Christmas have a common origin in the history of religious observances. The kindling of lights on these sacred days may be traced to the mid-winter solstice. It indicated the return of the sun—the lengthening of the days. About the mid-winter month in the primitive age of the race a day was set apart in honour of the sun that was coming back and the removal of the gloom which possessed the hearts of people during the absence of the sun. The 25th of Kisley and the 25th day of December then definitely belong to the family of solstice celebrations.

The synagogue, of course, connected the solstice observation with the historic setting of the Maccabaean struggle for religious freedom and liberty. With it, too, became associated the dramatic story of the little flask of sacred oil that escaped defilement at the hands of the heathens and lasted eight days miraculously though its amount normally was of one-day duration.

In such cruel days of war Chanukah ought to remind the Jew that our sires never deserted the field of battle. Though our tradition from ancient days has ever been a pacific one, yet we never hesitated to rise in defense of truth and justice. Anti-Semites like to ascribe cowardice to the Jew but history teaches to the contrary. Wherever the land wherein the Jew was given freedom he more than discharged his patriotic duties. In the cause of truth and justice the Jew battled heroically also in the realm of ideas and Judaism has survived even as the Jewish people who have lived by the faith.

Christian and Jew, each cherishing his religious identity, can do much in terms of religious unity. We rejoice that on Christmas Day millions of Christians will pay homage to the child of Bethlehem—born within the Jewish fold—who has become the inspiration for noble living.

Judaism and Christianity both recognize God as the source of all life; they both have a common goal, the Kingdom of God on earth. May Chanukah and the Christmastide help the respective adherents of the two great faiths to redeem the world from the present sorrow and darkness. May the light of Synagogue and Church illumine the world with faith in God, human compassion and brotherhood.

Judah Halevi — Poet And Sage

The Jewish world is this year observing the 800th anniversary of Judah Halevi, the greatest Hebrew poet since Bible times. To obtain the measure of his stature it is best we think in terms of the golden period of Jews in Spain. Life in Spain for four centuries during which the dynasty of the Ommeyad Kalifs ruled was like a brilliant dream breaking in on this long night of history. Mohammedan Spain in particular had some of the richest of Jews. There was Chasdai Ibn Shaprut, physician and statesman, Ibn Gabirol and Ibn Ezra, poet and commentator, respectively.

But the greatest voice that sang the song of the lost age was Judah Halevi, who was born in 1085 in Tudela, a city in Castile, Spain. His was a peaceful upbringing in a home of wealth. As a student exercises and a poet while become one of the greatest of physicians. But his practice did not provide him with his desires and tranquility so very much desired. For the greatest joys was that of writing verse.

He was a man of great faith. True it is found in his discovery he writes:

> This thought that I myself condone
> What is it? Only Thou dost know
> If well or ill—it well or slow
> Its pains shall work on my pain.
> Aye, if these lungs alone is hers
> Knowledge of my faith I pass
> For in my heart sit in Thy grace.

Judah Halevi, as philosopher will be best known through his Cuzari. He wrote his great work in Arabic in defense of Judaism. In his book he makes the immortal declaration that Israel is the heart of the world. In this work he expresses appreciation for Christianity and Mohammedanism, the two daughter religions of Judaism.

But above all other claims was his artistic versifying. Heine declared that Halevi's soul was one of the noblest and purest. When God created it He was so enraptured by its nature and exquisiteness that He could no restrain Himself and kissed it. It is this divine kiss which reverberates in its poetic creations. His poetry consists of the secular and the religio-national types. Many his religious poems compare well with the Psalms. These religious poems inspired millions of Jews. Three hundred of these are embodied in the liturgy of the synagogue.

However, his greatest poetic outpourings were of his love for Palestine. He was the pre-Herzl of his day who not merely disappointed in those Jews who failed to realize the significance of Palestine. His 'Ode' on the 9th Ab, the ninth day of Ab, is among the most soul-stirring of songs. There he expresses the great hunger of the Jew for the homeland—Palestine. Through his passionate Zionist poem Halevi sought to awaken the slumbering spirit of Israel.

Halevi had the vision to see that the conditions of the Jew in Spain were but temporary. When he contemporaries showed signs of security he was most anxious for them to realize the place and goal of Palestine in Jewish life. In the name of Hebrew he sang his odes to Zion. He lamented the tragedy of Israel, scattered and persecuted by a hostile world. He felt that the ultimate hope for the Jew was a return to Eretz Israel. The poet was in truth a prophet. Hundreds of years before Theodor Herzl, Halevi saw the dream of Palestine as a national Jewish home. He gave concrete evidence of his faith in Palestine when he surrendered his own security in Cordova, the intellectual centre of Europe, to go to Palestine. Legend has it that in the very centre of Jerusalem he was killed by an Arab horseman.

It is well that Jews in these days turn to their great poets for inspiration and guidance. He gave his consecration to the service of God and Israel. His example is an

I might have had an anchor."

Chanukah, the Feast of Lights, was made for faint-hearts who look at the Jewish world of now in despondency. For eight days it patiently treats them with increasing doses of candle light, one to cheer the first night, two on the second, and so on until there are eight points of flame that stand for eternity. Chanukah renews itself in miracles. For example, there was the famous small cruse of consecrated oil that contained enough to last one day. It lasted for eight days or until new oil could be prepared in the holy candlestick. When the Hasmonean priests entered the Temple on the twenty-fifth day of December and rededicated it three years to the day after it had been set up there they found the oil waiting. Some people smile indulgently and call that account of the wonder oil a legend. Loyal sons doubters and quickly reject their view if you have a drop of Jewish blood within you. The original oil was simply inexhaustible. It burned for eight days and the light is still there. Look at the candles and see if this isn't so.

Chanukah is a time holiday in a shaken world. Jewish life has always been marked and marred by insecurity, but Chanukah has lasted through new, for over two thousand years. Judas Maccabaeus instituted it he and his brothers and the elders of Israel, to be celebrated annually with mirth and joy in memory of the rededication of the sanctuary which had been polluted by the order of Antiochus Epiphanes. Antiochus had previously entered the Temple precincts to rob the treasury and carry away the precious ceremonial objects of gold. Two years later he had sent an officer through the country to kill, burn, plunder and give the observance of permanent desolation. Royal decrees had prohibited the practice of the Jewish religion and the observance of the Sabbath and festivals had forbidden circumcision, established an Acropolis, and set up an altar of burnt offerings.

Chanukah is inspiriting because it bears witness to the fact that Israel has been a light to the world in new concepts. Judas knew though that the Jews would be subdued quickly by force. Others may consider martyrdom, electing to die by torture or near with rather than to surrender. This was something entirely new. Men had died for country or god, for glory and for adventure but never died before for the right to freedom of worship. Remember that. Then the fire of being turned which has been in Judah has all these centuries come to us through a candle and screen down a prayer that the crucified Jew remember that was a story with what desperate courage, ruthlessness and terrible redemption men fight when the cause is that of religious liberty. Led by Judas, son of the priest Mattathias, who had escaped death in Jerusalem by leaving the village and his father at the head of a rugged guerilla warfare band of his followers defeated the pagan army after another. Hope was born in Judah. Failure and misfortune had been a consistent companion but he was not against the world with [illegible]

Charity Is Not Enough

Communal Harmony And Action For Survival Are The Program Of Today

By Martin M. Cohn, Of Toronto, Executive Director Of The United Jewish Welfare Fund

Where are the Federations of yesterday? What has happened to the Federation Board of Directors, the rich men of the community whose link with Judaism was charity? The answer is simple — a fast changing world, developments toward maturity in Jewish communities, and the growth of elements which threaten the entire Jewish race, all these are bringing about a new picture of Jewish communal life.

The terrible events in Europe have changed the whole outlook of Jewish life in the United States and Canada. As Morris D. Waldman, of the American Jewish Committee, stated at the last National Conference of Jewish Social Welfare "Interest in philanthropy which, even more than in the synagogue, was during the past generation the strongest expression of Jewish life in America, has, since 1933, become subordinated to the absorbing and harrowing interest in the problem of self-preservation."

This new perspective has greatly accelerated foreign and refugee relief work, and has increased the number and goals of overseas campaigns. It has broadened and intensified the interest in Palestine. It has also stimulated the growth of civic-protective organizations to combat the destructive forces aimed against the Jews. These developments have overshadowed the traditional problems of philanthropy. As an example, the early Assemblies of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds (whose latest report shows affiliation of 199 federations and welfare funds and community councils in 163 cities) were concerned with local social work problems. During the last three years, the Assemblies have given over most of their programmes to matters of national import in Jewish life, centering mainly around overseas relief and refugee aid, the upbuilding of Palestine, and dealing with the various manifestations of anti-Semitism.

These fundamental changes are futher reflected in the changing structure and outlook in Jewish communal life. The historical development of Jewish communal organizations on this continent is well known. Federations of Jewish Charities were the contribution of the early settlers, the German Jews who stretched out the hand of charity to the East European Jews of fewer possessions who followed them to this country. The latter, looking upon the Federations as the rich man's charity, gradually developed their own organizations as they improved their social and economic status. However, until the early and even middle 1930's, the Federations were the major expression of Jewish communal activity and achievement. During the later years of Federation existence, new factors came into the picture —the growth of institutions outside the Federations sponsored by the "other" sections of communities—the increased need for funds for overseas activities, for both Europe and Palestine—and the developing programmes of civic-protective activities.

These three factors made some new development essential both for efficient fund-raising in face of the huge sums required, and to meet the fundamental need for communal unity in face of the new and grave situation. The principle of central fund raising which had been successfully established by the Federations, was broadened to include all communal agencies, including Jewish education as well as overseas relief and Palestinian causes, and Welfare Funds were organized. The very name "Welfare" denotes its concern with the entire field of Jewish welfare, and covers all important aspects of communal life.

As the civic-protective or public relations programmes developed, many Jewish leaders came to realize that basic to successful effort was communal unity. The pressure of this development brought about the formation of Community Councils. As representative of every element in the community—Orthodox, and Reformed, the German and the East European Jew—the effective Community Council has become the pivot for all civic-protective programmes, the spokesman for a united community, and a centre for community planning.

Where was the Federation in all this new development? It was the original Federation, chiefly intended as a centralized fund-raising mechanism, which developed the broader conception of community organization and planning. The Federation blazed the trail for both the Welfare Fund and the Community Council, and has become absorbed in both.

What has happened to the former boards of directors of the Federations? On the whole, they have come out from their isolation, and have learned that charity is not enough. Their interest in philanthropic programmes has been relegated to a minor place and has been superseded by the more fundamental interest in communal harmony, and action for survival. The paternalistic attitude has tended to disappear, to give way to a real desire to work hand-in-hand with the other groups in the community. Those former Federation leaders who have not adopted this broader outlook have on the whole tended to lose their influence in the more dynamic developments in American Jewish communities; and remain only as survivors of a period which was important, but having made its contribution, must now be relegated to the past. A few writers do still fling an occasional dart at "charitarian Jews". They have not realized that this is not now a major issue in Jewish life, and that there are many more fundamental issues which should concern them.

The positive contribution of these philanthropists in their time, however limited their point of view may seem now, must not be overlooked. They established the principle of central fund-raising, one of the foundations of Jewish communal survival on this continent. They established some of the basic institutions of our communities—our family welfare societies, big brother and big sister movements, and others, whose high standards have set the goal for similar non-Jewish organizations. These institutions still play a basic part in the new programme; they are the community's bulwarks against disintegration. Without the services of private social agencies, more people would fill the ranks of social misfits and outcasts.

No public relations programme for a Jewish community can be considered adequate unless every possible service is maintained to assist families and individuals in gaining financial independence and mental stability. A Jewish private social agency that is helping to reduce the number of unemployed and subsequently the number on the on the relief rolls, is doing a constructive piece of public relations work. In these basic social services, much of the present leadership, lay and professional, was trained. On the whole, the picture of the American scene indicates that those communities with the most effective older Federations have now the most effective communal set-up to face the to-day's much more tremendous pressures on Jewish life.

To-day, no matter what lies ahead, one thing is important for Jewish communities. We must look to the future, and not to the past. Old lines of division, outworn concepts, and out-moded antagonisms, must be forgotten. From Federations to Welfare Funds and Community Councils has been a growing-up process, and maturity is never easily won. When it has been achieved, it results in tolerance and understanding and in the ability to eliminate the unimportant things in life so that the important issues will stand out. Having reached this maturity, we must muster every resource of experience and leadership, both lay and professional, to meet the most important problem we have ever faced—survival.

Departure From Bonalfa

By Ernst Behrendt

The Blums were sitting at the dinner table when the door bell rang twice. They worked though they had left Germany more than two years ago, and though up to now nobody had disturbed their peaceful lives in this little Italian town of Bonalfa, every sound of the door-bell still meant to them excitement and possible danger. Then they heard the maid open the door and answer an excited voice, but they could not tell whose voice it was. After a moment the maid came in.

"Mrs. Friedmann wants to see you. She says it's very important."

The Blums looked at each other. Cornelia Blum opened her mouth as if she wanted to make a remark, but the maid's presence restrained her. She turned to her husband, her expression suggesting that he take the responsibility and tell the girl to let Mrs. Friedmann in. He shifted uneasily in his chair.

"Tell Mrs. Friedmann to come in," he said.

When the girl disappeared the Blums had a whispered but agitated discussion.

"That impossible woman again!" Cornelia said. "She is sure to try to borrow money because—because—" Cornelia could not think of what reason Mrs. Friedmann might use as a pretext for borrowing money, "and tomorrow she'll be wearing a new clip or a hat from Cortelli's which will look terrible on her. Are you going to lend her the money?"

"I don't know," her husband said. He obviously felt very uncomfortable.

"But you will, of course. And yet you don't like her. I don't like her. Nobody likes her. Yesterday Mrs. Ginsberg told me that Mrs. Friedmann had told her she wanted a new wrist watch because she didn't like her old one any more. I can't afford a new wrist watch."

Sylvia Friedmann had taken off her coat and arranged her hair very carefully before the mirror in the hall. It always took her a long time to arrange her hair. Now she entered the room. She wore a dress of transparent red crepe which contrasted disturbingly with her reddish hair; the dress was dotted with fancy white flowers, and a gold buckle in the shape of a dragon's head held together the two ends of her belt. A long pearl chain around her neck dangled to the dragon's head. The shoes on her little feet were serpent skin.

Carmella Blum noticed every ridiculous detail of Sylvia Friedmann's appearance at once. She seemed satisfied that her preconceived opinion of her visitor was once more confirmed. Her husband rose from his chair. He was polite, too polite, when he asked Mrs. Friedmann to take a seat.

"I am so excited," she exclaimed without stopping for formalities. "I don't know what to do." She was breathing heavily.

"Will you have some dinner with us?" Mrs. Blum asked. "We are just beginning."

"Dinner? I couldn't eat anything now. Don't you know what has happened to us?"

The Blums did not know. Had Sylvia been a more attentive listener she might have guessed from the tone of their answer that they were impatient, almost angry. Perhaps she did notice it, but she did not care. "They have expelled us," she said in a dramatic voice.

The Blums rose simultaneously. "Who has expelled you? What happened?"

"The police, of course. We have to leave within two weeks."

"That's impossible. They can't . . ."

"Let me tell you. I'm so excited. I can't speak. But he's so clever and intelligent—Louis, I mean—and they envy him, they have envied him all the time, as a matter of fact. And last night they sent a policeman to our apartment and had Louis arrested. At the station they told him we would have to leave Bonalfa, to leave the country within two weeks. Then they released him without further explanation."

"But why? It's impossible!" the Blums said again. They both were nervous; Cornelia lit a cigarette although she seldom smoked.

"But I told you! They were jealous of him because he's doing so well. He is the best mechanic in Bonalfa."

"Of course he is, Mrs. Friedmann. But that can't be the reason."

"But what else could it be? Or do you believe the stories about their expelling all the foreign Jews?"

"Maybe . . ."

"I tell you, no. Perhaps they're going to expel all the foreigners. I heard that too, but Louis was just too intelligent. He . . ."

Mr. Blum interrupted the catalogue of Mr. Friedmann's talents. "Where will you go?" he asked.

"If you were in our predicament you wouldn't ask that. The question is, where can we go? Louis took the night train to Rome; he phoned me this afternoon. I waited all day at the phone for his call. It was dreadful."

"And what did he say?"

"He said that he's been at every consulate, and that every one refused us a visa, except—was it Paraguay or Uruguay . . . anyhow, some place in Africa. And we'll have to leave for Africa in a fortnight."

"Don't you mean South America?"

"Of course, America. I'm so mixed up. But we'll have to go."

There was a short silence. The expression of dislike on Cornelia's face had disappeared. She looked bewildered know. "Poor thing," she murmured, and cast a glance at her husband. Mr. Blum realised that he was expected to say something.

He felt uneasy. He, like all the others, had never liked the Friedmanns. He had nothing in particular against Louis Friedmann who was an honest unpretentious man. Louis would never have attracted Blum's attention either in a good or a bad sense. One would have endured his presence easily in this colony of exiled and homeless families if he had not brought this impossible woman with him. Nobody knew anything about her. Therefore everybody was ready to spread the most fantastic stories about her past. "You can tell from her face!"—although she seemed to behave properly and to be devoted to her husband. But, of course, this fact did not entitle the Friedmanns to social equality with other families. When one met the Friedmanns one greeted them politely, but one invited them seldom. Sometimes, when Sylvia was dressed too gaudily, one avoided being seen talking to her. The natives of Bonaifa shared the general opinion about the couple. How often they had all wished that the Friedmanns would move away. The Friedmanns themselves did not seem to resent the general animosity. If they did, Sylvia compensated for it by buying even gaudier dresses.

But it was different now. If the Friedmanns left, they would not be going voluntarily. As it was impossible to imagine that the little man had committed a crime, or that anybody envy him, the expulsion must be the first sign of a new policy, a policy which was directed against all of them. It meant that the most harmless and most unimportant man was being expelled first, but that the others would follow, tomorrow, in a week, in a month.

Blum realized that although they had never accepted the Friedmanns it was their duty to help them now. The danger was shared by all of them, for the police would surely not differentiate among foreigners according to their social desirability. Blum felt inclined to forgive Sylvia a good deal, almost as though he were saying, "Considering your peculiar position we will forget your background and your dresses." His voice now had a sympathetic ring, all the more since he knew that his wife would not misinterpret his kindness.

"Is there anything we can do for you, Mrs. Friedmann?" he asked.

Sylvia seemed not at all surprised at his friendliness.

"I don't know," she said. "We have to leave and . . ." Her eyes filled with tears. "I hate to mention it, but the consul of . . . of that country said they would only take us if we had money. And we haven't."

She sobbed, her tears making shining trails down her powdered face. "We haven't enough," she repeated. "We have five thousand lire in the bank, and our furniture isn't worth more than six thousand. That would pay for the passage. But the consul said . . ."

"What did he say?" Cornelia asked.

"He said," Sylvia answered, still crying, "he said that we have to show twenty thousand lire before we can get an entry permit. Twenty thousand at least, he said. Of course, when we're there, we won't starve. Louis is so intelligent, and I'll do all I can. I'll do the laundry and all the hard work. I'll get a job in a factory if I have to. I'm sure we'll get along. But twenty thousand lire—it's so much and we just haven't twenty thousand."

The Blums looked at each other. There was silent understanding in their glances. Sylvia Friedmann was still crying when Blum walked across the room, lit a cigar, stopped in front of her and said:

"Mrs. Friedmann, you must not cry. We'll see what we can do. Twenty thousand, that's a very large sum, and I could not . . . you see, nobody knows what will happen in these times . . . But we'll see. It was very sensible of you to come to us. Our friends will understand your position. Perhaps they'll be able to help you. I'll lend you . . . I think I can promise you the money or at least a great part of it. I'm going to call them up immediately. You wait here . . ." He repeated. "Yes, you wait here, while I go to tell them."

"And you will have dinner with us?" Mrs. Blum added. Sylvia Friedmann nodded gratefully.

In the adjoining room Blum had a telephone conversation with his friend Ginsberg.

"Something very serious has happened, Ginsberg. That Friedmann woman is here . . . No, it's really serious this time. The Friedmanns have been expelled from the country . . . No, at least she doesn't know the reason . . . I don't know. He went to Rome last night . . . Not in Europe, South America . . . No. I'm not glad, Ginsberg. Don't you realize that it might happen to any of us tomorrow? . . . Of course it might . . . Now, they haven't enough money; it's not only the passage but twenty thousand lire besides. They have to show the money before they can get a visa . . . What do you say? No, I can't give them the whole amount, but I think each of us should contribute . . . I'

I think, let's say a thousand, even twelve hundred . . . But what can they do? . . . Oh, that's fine; that would be two thousand, if you and I . . . No, you should see her now. She's desperate. She says she'll work for him, get a factory job, anything; I believe she would too. The trouble is how they can get in . . . Do you think he'll give too? How much? . . . That would be three thousand. And what about Springer? . . . Sure. Now listen, it's not only our duty but, you see, today nobody knows. Maybe we'll need the Friedmanns some day . . . Ha-ha, I hope not. He is a very brave little man, and she . . . Yes, yes, but I've changed my opinion about her . . . It is possible we'll be in the same fix very soon. All right, you call up Springer, and I'll try with Schiff and the others . . . I think so . . . So long."

He convinced his other friends too that it was their duty to cooperate. Half an hour later, when he returned to the other room, his wife and Sylvia were still sitting at the dinner table. Sylvia had finished eating; Cornelia had scarcely touched the food. He was surprised to find them engaged in a very friendly conversation and heard his wife explaining, "I make them this way. First I stew the meat until . . ."

"Excuse me," he interrupted, "but I want to tell you, Mrs. Friedmann, that you haven't anything to worry about. I talked to my friends, and I'm sure you'll have enough money by tomorrow."

Sylvia bounced up. "That's just wonderful, Mr. Blum. You're such a dear. And your wife is so nice too. She gave me so many recipes that I could almost get a job as a cook in . . . in that country. And the money, oh, that's just wonderful. Louis will be so glad. How can I thank you, Mr. Blum?"

She looked as if she were about to embrace him, but she restrained herself. "Thank you so very much," she repeated. "Louis will be back tomorrow morning. We'll sell our furniture at once. You're so good to us. Of course we'll send the money back as soon as we are settled there."

When Sylvia had left, the Blums remained troubled. "I'm afraid it will be our turn next," he said.

"How much will you give them?"

"About a thousand. Ginsberg will give a thousand too, and so will Schiff and Haymann and the others. I have collected eleven thousand now, and I think Ginsberg will get the rest. To those Friedmanns twenty thousand lire must be an awful lot of money."

"Where could we go if we were expelled?"

"That's just what I was thinking, Cornelia. Probably it would have to be Paraguay or Uruguay."

"To Africa then?" Cornelia said.

They both laughed, but there was anxiety in their laughter.

The uneasiness increased that evening when they met the Ginsbergs. Ginsberg's brother-in-law had just returned from Rome and brought alarming news.

"The Ministry of the Interior has refused to renew several hundred permits for residence," he reported.

They discussed politics and the Friedmanns.

"I thought I'd never be able to abide that woman," Cornelia Blum remarked, "but I feel differently now. In my eyes she is no longer a woman who—you know what I mean—but just an unhappy creature. She has bad taste but she loves her Louis and believes him the most intelligent man under the sun. That's a very common mistake among simple wives."

"But her clothes!" Mrs. Ginsberg objected.

"And her affairs!" Ginsberg's brother-in-law added.

Cornelia found herself in the new rôle of Sylvia's defender. "You don't really know a thing about her—only rumors," she addressed the brother-in-law, "and if she hasn't had anybody to tell her she shouldn't wear those clothes, it's not her fault. After all, she deserves our pity. Imagine, they have to go to another country, with no money except that twenty thousand, and begin again from the bottom. Isn't it terrible?"

Finally the Ginsbergs seemed inclined to forgive Sylvia her clothes.

Similar discussions took place when the Blums met their other friends. The news of the expulsion had spread quickly through the colony. They crowded together, seeking shelter in each other's presence; their gregarious instincts included even the Friedmanns.

On the evening Louis returned, they assembled in his modest home and induced him to repeat again and again the story of his wanderings from one consulate to the next. The little man was overwhelmed by the attention which all these important men and women were paying him; this feeling was even stronger than his excitement over the expulsion. Instinctively he assumed the attitude of a man who is well informed.

"I give you this advice," he said. "Don't postpone getting your visas. The consulates are already crowded."

The men did not answer; they felt that Louis Friedmann was right, and yet they did not admit it openly. Blum led Friedmann to a corner and handed him an envelope containing the money.

"Take it, Friedmann," he said, "we know you will give it back when you are in position to do so."

"Poor girl," Mrs. Blum was saying to Mrs. Ginsberg in another corner of the room, pointing at Sylvia. She's being mighty decent about the whole thing. She said she'd do the laundry, and work in a factory. It must be awful for her. She's so frail and just crazy about nice things."

"If you call her dresses nice, you're right," Mrs. Ginsberg whispered.

"I don't call them nice. But at least she thinks she looks pretty when she is all dolled up."

Sylvia Friedmann was talking to a small group of men and women. "The landlady told me it would be best to run a chicken farm. She thinks the competition wouldn't be heavy, and the work, well, it's hard, but pleasant too. I'll have to get up every morning at five o'clock. Don't you think my black smock would be all right for that kind of work?"

She had the sympathy of her audience. Everybody wished the Friedmanns luck.

During the next few days the Friedmanns sold their furniture. Louis went to Rome again to collect the documents he needed. Blum accompanied him to find out where he and his wife could go themselves if they were expelled. Upon his return to Bonaifa he learned that Ginsberg's permission to stay had been cancelled; he had been ordered to leave within two months. Then the Springers and the Schiffs heard from a private source that they would be next.

There was no panic among the homeless. They had foreseen their fate since the blow against the Friedmanns had fallen. They were even grateful to the Friedmanns who had involuntarily warned the others, though the warning had not helped very much. Once the Friedmanns came to the Blums and asked for a little more money since the furniture had brought less than they expected. Blum called up his friends immediately and returned to the room with the promise of additional help. The Friedmanns were happy and repeated they would never forget what the Blums had done for them.

Everybody began to sell his goods. There were furniture, engines, automobiles and pictures to be transformed in cash. The Friedmanns had liquidated their little household quickly; so they were now free to help the others dispose of theirs. Everybody appreciated Louis's reports on the possibilities of getting overseas visas.

Sylvia enjoyed unprecedented popularity. There were a thousand questions in every household; whether it was advisable to moth-proof fur coats before they were packed, who would buy the china cups which Mrs. Ginsberg did not want to take with her; where one could buy wooden boxes. Sylvia knew all the answers, and if she did not know she found somebody among her native acquaintances who did. Whenever she appeared at the threshold of a home its womenfolk felt relieved. Nobody seemed to remember the time when Sylvia had been a woman whom one did not invite. Now every man and woman in the colony overlooked her gaudy dresses. They felt that they had never known Sylvia as she really was. Now they looked upon her as the most energetic and yet the most pitiable of them all. When

If England Had An "Aryan" Test, A Rude Awakening Would Be In Store For Many

The Blood Of The Inquisitional Martyrs Is Mixed With That Of Some Foremost Families Of British Aristocracy

By Dr. Cecil Roth, English Historian

Centuries of inbreeding, coupled with a long literary tradition, are presumably responsible for the widespread impression that Jew and Gentile constitute two communities apart, with no marriage or giving in marriage between them save under exceptional circumstances. Most persons in England, indeed, were amazed on learning the immense number of persons of mixed descent in Germany, who were affected by the Nazi "Aryan Law." The total of those with a Jewish grand-parent ("one-quarter New Christians," as the Inquisition, Herr Hitler's precursor, would have termed them) is estimated at millions. If the inquiry were carried further back, the number affected would be greater still.

The case is very much the same, or even more marked, in some neighboring countries. It is generally believed, notwithstanding this, that England is free from any such admixture of alien blood. The Jewish settlement here is, after all, comparatively modern, dating back for less than 300 years; its proportion has never been high; and baptism en masse never became a rule on the fashion as it did in many parts of the Continent.

Today it is no exaggeration to say that, even among the older nobility (or perhaps one should say, especially among the older nobility) scarcely a single family is free from some such admixture or alliance.

The process began at the period, now nearly two centuries ago, when the polished Spanish and Portuguese Jews, refugees from the Inquisition and sometimes themselves of noble extraction, were still predominant in the Anglo-Jewish community. A typical instance was that of the descendants of the great Sampson Gideon Abudiente (or Sampson Gideon, as he was more generally called), for many years the oracle of Change Alley and the confidant of Walpole and Pelham, who did perhaps more than any other man to preserve the financial stability of the country at the time of the '45. The ignominious failure of the Jewish Naturalization Bill in 1753 (the "Jew Bill," as it was universally called) convinced him of the impossibility of establishing his position as an English gentleman while he remained a Jew.

He accordingly resigned his membership of the synagogue (to which, ever, he still continued to contribute clandestinely), and had his children brought up as Christians. His eldest son, called after his father, was baptised in childhood, educated at Eton, created a baronet while still at school, and finally married the daughter of Chief Justice Sir John Eardley Wilmot, whose name he assumed. In 1789 he was raised to the peerage, under the title of Baron Eardley. His father's dream of founding a landed family, for which he had given up so much, was not destined to be fulfilled, all of Lord Eardley's sons predeceasing him.

However, one of his daughters married the fourteenth Lord Saye and Sele, her son succeeding to the title. Another became the wife of Colonel Childers of the Light Dragoons. One of this lady's granddaughters married Lord Auckland, their posterity including, besides the present Baron, the wife of Viscount Chetwynd, and the heir to that title. Among the other descendants of the match were H. C. E. Childers, Gladstone's Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Erskine Childers, the talented novelist, who was executed for his share in the Irish Rebellion of 1922. Another nobleman connected by marriage with the Abudientes was Viscount Gage, who married Lord Eardley's sister, Elizabeth.

One of Sampson Gideon's own sisters, Rachel, married Moses Carrino de Paiba. She was thus the mother of that engaging wastrel, Abraham de Paiba, who was first boon companion, and later sworn enemy, of Edward Wortley Montagu, husband of the queen of English blue-stockings. Another of the children, Bathsheba de Paiba, became the second wife of Pellegrin Treves, head of a London Jewish family not long since immigrated from Venice, and subsequently a familiar figure in the entourage of the Prince Regent. The posterity of this match soon abandoned Judaism almost in its entirety.

Most striking was the record of Pellegrin Treves, junior, who entered the service of the East India Company and became Postmaster General of Bengal. He married Hetty Stokes, natural daughter of Sir R. Sloper. Their younger daughter, named Hetty after her mother, became the wife of Thomas Clifton, of Lytham Hall, Lancashire. Mrs. Clifton's eldest son, who succeeded to the property, married a sister of the Earl of Lonsdale; one of their daughters was the wife of Captain the Hon. James Hovell, Lord Thurlow's son and heir, killed in the Boer War. Her third son, created Lord Donington in 1880, married a daughter of the Marquess of Hastings, Countess of Loudoun in her own right. The eldest son of this match was the late Lord Loudoun; the second, who married a daughter of the Earl of Verulam, was father of the present Countess and of Lady St. David's; while his sister was the late Duchess of Norfolk.

After this dizzy height, it is almost an anti-climax to refer to the fact that a younger son of Hetty Treves and Thomas Clifton married the second daughter of the Marquis of Hastings, and was father of the 24th Baron Grey de Ruthyn and of the Honorable Lady Bellingham, whose daughter is now Marchioness of Bute.

The toast of the Jewish community in London, in the middle of the eighteenth century, was Kitty da Costa, the delicious, coquettish daughter of the wealthy Joseph da Costa, of Totteridge. Her husband was Jose Villareal, who not long before had escaped from the clutches of the Portuguese Inquisition under circumstances which beggar the extravagances of fiction. In 1731, when only 22 years of age, she was left a widow with two children—still highly attractive and an eminently desirable match. Her cousin, Jacob Mendes da Costa, conceived from certain passages between them that he had a claim upon her hand, and brought a sensational case against her in the Arches Court of Canterbury for breach of promise of marriage.

However, she had her own way, married a lawyer named Mellish, and her children by her previous match were brought up in the dominant faith. The daughter, Elizabeth, married Viscount Galway. The present incumbent of the title (formerly Lieutenant-Colonel of the Life Guards) as well as the late Lord Houghton (whose mother was a daughter of the fifth Viscount) and his son, the Most Honorable Marquess of Crewe, are among the descendants of this match.

A cousin of Kitty da Costa and contemporary of Sampson Gideon, was Moses Mendes, grandson of Fernando Mendes, the Marrano physician-ordinary to Catherine of Braganza. Early in life he became converted to Christianity, made a fortune on Change, and retired to the country, where he indulged in literary pursuits. He became well known as a wit and a bon vivant, published a large number of books and poems, and had his pieces applauded at Drury Lane and Covent Garden. It is claimed that he is the only English poet who died worth £100,000! His wife was a daughter of the Reverend Sir Francis Head, Bart.

After his death in 1758, his two sons dropped their father's name, assuming their mother's by royal warrant. Frances, daughter of the elder, married the Honorable and Reverend George Herbert, son of the first Earl of Carnarvon. The other son, James Roper Head, had a distinguished progeny. His elder son, Sir George Head, a veteran of the Peninsula, was Deputy Marshall at the coronations of William IV. and Queen Victoria; the younger, Sir Francis Bond Head, Bart., a veteran of Waterloo, founded a family which still perpetuates the title which he earned as Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada from 1835 to 1837.

In the early part of the eighteenth century, The Punchbowl tavern in Drury Lane—a favorite rendezvous of stage and stage was kept by Isaac Nurse, a Jew from Mantua. (It was he who, speaking to Horace Walpole in Westminster Hall when the leaders of the '45 were tried, expressed the hope that they would not be treated too leniently, as if so no one would be able to sleep safely in his bed). On the opening of the Theatre Royal in Covent Garden, in 1732, when The Beggar's Opera was presented, the part of Polly Peachum was played with stupendous success by his daughter, Hannah.

For many years after, she was the most resplendent theatrical star in London. Subsequently, she was taken off the stage by the Earl of Oxford, and her sister, Maria, by Sir Edward Walpole, the latter's brother. It was long before this triumphant progress reached its conclusion. A daughter of the latter irregular alliance married the second Earl Waldegrave, a former Prime Minister, after whose death she became the wife of the Duke of Gloucester, George III's brother. It was this romantic but slightly indecorous episode which led to the enactment of the Royal Marriage Act of 1772, by which the King's consent was required for the marriage of an heir to the throne.

This measure did not, however, operate retrospectively; and William Frederick, the second Duke of Gloucester, no doubt owed some of the charms which captivated George III's own daughter, Mary, to his fascinating Jewish great-grandmother, daughter of the landlord of The Punchbowl Tavern.

The alliances with the royal house was not the only one of distinction contracted by the posterity of "old Isaacson's" granddaughter. By her first marriage with Earl Waldegrave, his grandchild had three daughters. One was Elizabeth Laura, who married her cousin, the fourth Earl, and is ancestress of the present incumbent of the title, as well as of Lord Selborne and of the Countess Grey (wife of Earl Grey); another was Charlotte, who married the Duke of Grafton and is ancestress of the present Duke; while another, Anna Horatia (whose second name betrays the period of her birth) married Admiral Lord Hugh Seymour, and was grandmother of the Marquess of Hertford.

The mutual attraction between the Waldegrave family and Jews of humble extraction did not end with the reign of George III. A well-known singer of the late Hanoverian era was John Braham, who had formerly been a choir-boy in the Great Synagogue, London, and whose voice was considered by experts no less angelic than his daughter. This lady, Frances Elizabeth Anne, knew how to use her charms to the best advantage, contracting four brilliant marriages one after the other. Her first was with John James Waldegrave, of Navestock, Essex; the second with George Edward, seventh Earl of Waldegrave (great grand-nephew of the nobleman who had succumbed to the charms of Maria Walpole); the third with George Granville Harcourt, eldest son of the Archbishop of York; the crescendo being reached in 1863 with Chichester, first Lord Carlingford.

In 1744, the Spanish and Portuguese community in London honored Mr. Jacob Israel Bernal by electing him as its Gabbai, or Treasurer. In the following year, he desired to marry a tudesca—a member of the despised German and Polish community. The idea of the contamination of his hidalgo blood in this manner shocked his fellow-officials. He had to resign his position, and consent was given for the wedding ceremony only under humiliating conditions. Henceforth, his connection with the community was less intimate; and it was not remarkable that his son, Jacob Israel Bernal, married out of the faith and left the community.

The latter's son, Ralph Bernal, famous as an art-collector, was a prominent Member of Parliament for a third of the nineteenth century. His son, in turn, married the daughter of an Irish landowner, whose name he adopted in addition to his own: and, as Mr. Bernal Osborne, was distinguished in Victorian society as a wit (a typically "Irish" wit, admirers like Lady Dorothy Neville thought).

Grace, his daughter, became in 1874 the second wife of the tenth Duke of St. Albans, their son, Lord Osborne de Vere Beauclerk (who married the late Lord Lansdowne's daughter) now being heir-presumptive to the title. Their daughter, moreover, Lady Moyra de Vere Beauclerk, married Lord Richard Frederick Cavendish. One of the daughters of this match married Lord Balniel, M.P., heir to the twenty-seventh Earl of Crawford and Balcarres; and another Lord Cranborne, M.P. heir to the Marquess of Salisbury! Thus the blood of the Inquisitional martyrs, and of the despised tudesca, and of Charles Stuart, and of Nell Gwynne, are united in some of the foremost families of the British aristocracy.

In the second half of the eighteenth century, and the beginning of the nineteenth, there was much secession from the Spanish and Portuguese community in London, which robbed it of some of its best-known names (it is sufficient to recall in this connection, the antecedents of Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield). One of the best known of the families thus lost was that of Ricardo, which enriched English culture with the most eminent political economist of his day.

Among his relatives was Percy Ricardo, of Bramley Park, Surrey, a grandson of Abraham Israel Ricardo, who in 1781 had held the office of Warden of the ancient synagogue in Bevis Marks. In 1868, his daughter, Amy Mary, married the seventh Duke of Richmond and Lennox (it almost seems as though the posterity of the Merry Monarch has an especial penchant for Semitic alliances). Her son succeeded to the title in 1928 as the eighth Duke; while her daughter married the late Duke of Northumberland, that distinguished anti-Semite, their son now holding the title. Another granddaughter of Percy Ricardo, Amy Cecile Ricardo, married a son of the first Baron Hamilton of Dalzell, and was mother of the heir-presumptive to that barony; while one of her sisters married a son of the Earl of Meath.

Another of the families which seceded from the community at this period was that of Lopes (in two syllables!) whose head was subsequently implicated in one of the worst election scandals of the age of Rotten Boroughs. The family, metamorphosed into Lopes (in one syllable!) now ranks high in country circles in Devonshire; its present head being grandson of Lord Churston, son-in-law of Lord Mount Edgcumbe, and a relative by marriage of Lord Carnock. One member of the family, a famous justice of Victorian times, was raised to the Upper House as Lord Ludlow. His barony became extinct with his son's death; but his daughter was the wife of Lord Bledisloe, and mother of the present heir to the title.

Less exalted than these hidalgos was "Dr." Samuel Solomon of Liverpool, one of the greatest quacks and publicistic geniuses of his day, whose Balm of Gilead was at one time world-famous. He had a large family, consisting of three sons and seven daughters, almost all of whom married outside the Jewish faith. Of the latter, one, Maria, became the wife of Dr. James Byron Bradley, of Buxton. Their daughter Josephine married a certain Henry Byron and was the mother of Henry James Byron, the dramatist. Another child of Samuel Solomon's was Eliza, wife of George Bradnock Stubbs. Their daughter, Emily Eliza, married the Reverend Henry J. Newbolt, Rector of St. Mary's, Bilston, and was the mother of Sir Henry Newbolt, the most English of contemporary poets. Amelia, Samuel Solomon's ninth child, found her destiny in a clergyman named Warner, their daughter Henrietta marrying John Black, of Ceylon. Among the offspring of this union was Lily, who was the wife of the thirteenth Lord Louth. The present Randal Plunkett, fourteenth Baron Louth (cr. 1541), of Louth Hall, Ardee, County Louth and Summerfield House, Elstree, is thus a great-great-grandson of the Liverpool quack!

Instances of this sort can be multiplied. The great Baron Lyndhurst, thrice Lord Chancellor, married Georgiana, daughter of Lewis Goldsmith, politician, author, agitator, and one of the most persistent thorns in the side of Napoleon Bonaparte. A successor of Lyndhurst's, Farrer Herschell, first Baron Herschell, Gladstone's Lord Chancellor, was the son of the Reverend Ridley Haim Herschell, a convert from Judaism and active conversionist among the Jews. The title is now enjoyed by his grandson, whose aunt is daughter of the first Baron) is Lady Furness.

The Windsor
ON DOMINION SQUARE

Notwithstanding the position which the Rothschild family has held in the Jewish community, and their general fidelity to the traditions of their faith, its daughters have frequently found their husbands in Gentile circles. Constance, a daughter of Sir Anthony de Rothschild, Bart., married Cyril Flower, who was afterwards Lord Battersea, and her sister Annie, the Honourable Eliot Yorke, son of the Earl of Hardwicke. One of her cousins, Hannah-Meyer, married the Honourable Henry Fitzroy, a further descendant of Charles II; one of her daughters became Lady Coutts Lindsay; while among her grand-children were the Duchess of Gramont and the Princess of Wagram.

Another Hannah Rothschild married the late Earl of Rosebery, one of the greatest figures in English public life in his day. The present Lord Rosebery is her son; Lady Sybil Grant, poet, writer, and artist, is her daughter; while another daughter married the Marquis of Crewe, who as we have seen, is descended from the Spanish-Jewish families of DaCosta and Villareal. A close connection of the Rothschilds was Amelia Cohen, widow of Baron Denis Samuel, who subsequently married the Earl of Orkney.

In more recent years, the working of the melting-pot has been more rapid. The Marchioness of Cholmondeley (whose son, the Earl of Rocksavage, is heir to the title) is a sister of Sir Philip Sassoon. Amelia, Lady Fitzgerald, mother of the third Baronet, is a daughter of the late H. L. Bischoffsheim. The Marchioness of Winchester, wife of the Premier Marquess of England, is daughter of the late A. Hoffnung (Hawaiian Charge d'Affaires at the court of St. James), and widow of Captain Claude Marks, son of the first Minister of the Reform Synagogue in London. In 1922, Lord Louis Mountbatten, a great-grandson of Queen Victoria, married Edwina Cynthia Annette Ashley, granddaughter of Sir Ernest Cassel.

This survey has included only a few outstanding examples of families which have received some Jewish admixture in England in the course of the last two centuries.

It is not desired to draw any ulterior conclusion from these facts. Of the persons mentioned in whose ancestry some Jewish component may be traced, perhaps not a single one is even strongly Jewish in sympathy, much less by profession. Many, indeed, are completely oblivious of the Jewish blood which courses in their veins, while a few are outspokenly anti-Semetic. Israel's hold upon his children is not, in fact, so tenacious as is generally believed.

But at the present time, this inquiry has a special significance. Were anti-Semitism on the German model to spread to England, and the Aryan clause enforced in London as it is in Berlin, a rude awakening would be in store for many of those who boast their Norman and Anglo-Saxon descent. In the most unexpected quarters, perhaps, a leaven of Jewish blood with all its vital potentialities, might be discerned. Let the British Nazis beware! After all, as Defoe insisted more than two centuries ago, in his "True Born Englishman":

Which does not from some foreigner derive.

I couldn't shake my lazy mood. Was it one of my sudden unaccountable spells of "blue" days? Maybe I'm run down. Now I do another thing to prevent it by eating Kellogg's All-Bran. It's a wise way to get that delicious bran you need. All-Bran supplies the natural bulk and the vitamin B1. I eat it as a cereal or in delicious muffins. It's grand to be "regular" again. You can get All-Bran from any grocer. Made by Kellogg's in London, Canada.

COMMON SENSE No. 2

WHEN you order one ale and the waiter brings you another with the assurance it's just as good, your common sense tells you there's something wrong!

After all, if the other ale were "just as good" it wouldn't be necessary to push it that way.

Besides, common sense tells us that without Labatt's old English recipe for India Pale Ale, without London deep-well water, and without the Labatt family tradition, you can't get another ale as good as Labatt's.

No sir! And even if it seems a little like Labatt's when you drink it, you'll know in a moment whether the flavour lingers pleasantly on your palate after the ale's all gone.

IF IT DOESN'T TASTE LIKE LABATT'S IT ISN'T LABATT'S

GYPROC WOOL INSULATION

1. GYPROC WOOL is THICK insulation, and without adequate thickness no insulating material is effective.
2. GYPROC WOOL is sufficiently dense to prevent free passage of heat-laden air.
3. Will hold its shape. GYPROC WOOL is resilient, which means that it retains its full thickness and will not settle.
4. GYPROC WOOL is treated so as to resist moisture.
5. GYPROC WOOL, made entirely from virgin rock, is permanent, incombustible and vermin-proof.
6. The long fibres are closely interwoven and uniformly felted in well-formed batts which are easy to install on either a flat or vertical surface.
7. With all its advantages, GYPROC WOOL costs no more than ordinary materials and can be installed by unskilled labour.

Departure From Benalla

she was not present they called her "that poor little thing."

The day of departure approached. The night before, the Blums gave a supper in honor of the Friedmanns. Louis made a modest speech, mentioning again his and his wife's gratitude. Blum replied in serious words. "Who knows when and where we will meet again?" he said. "Today our old world is going to wrack and ruin. It is our duty to stick together and help one another as much as we can. We are very proud if we have succeeded in lightening your burden. We will never forget you, and we are convinced that you will never forget us."

The women sobbed. Cornelia even embraced Sylvia and kissed her. The men slapped Louis encouragingly on the back.

The next morning the whole colony saw the Friedmanns off. They brought cigarettes, flowers, candy and books to the pier; again Blum put an envelope in Louis's hand. Sylvia Friedmann had not yet arrived; her husband explained that she still had something to attend to in town. Then she appeared, dressed in a grey traveling suit, a green hat on her head. She was very excited, but everybody was excited, and the women kissed her, putting boxes of candy in her arms. "Good luck, Sylvia," they said, "good luck, Louis." The ship's siren drowned out the answer; the Friedmanns left the pier and went up the gangplank. "Good-bye, good-bye. We'll meet again, I'm sure we will."

As the ship slowly left the harbor the people on the pier stood waving their handkerchiefs.

"I am so glad we could help those Friedmanns," Blum said to his wife.

"So am I," she replied. "Do you think we really will see them again?"

"It's not so impossible. Perhaps it will only be a few months."

"And would you like to be seen with them—in that country?"

"I don't know. Sure I would. Why not? They are poor little people, so brave and optimistic."

"But did you notice how she was dressed?" Cornelia asked.

"I didn't pay any particular attention. Certainly not worse than usually."

"She had a green hat!"

"Why shouldn't she? It's a matter of taste, not of character."

"Maybe. But this green hat came from Cortelli's. I saw it in the window yesterday. It cost three hundred lire."

For a moment Blum was silent. "Three hundred lire," he thought. "This morning I gave Louis another two hundred. That silly woman."

After a while his wife went on. "I know it was from Cortelli's. Such an expensive hat for a woman in her position. It's almost a sin."

They were still waving their handkerchiefs although the ship was far away now.

"And yet," Cornelia continued, "perhaps I can understand her.

The Reconstructionist Viewpoint

ZIONISM AND THE AMERICAN JEW

By Rabbi Eugene Kohn, Managing Editor, The Reconstructionist Magazine

The Zionist Organization of America is now engaged in a strenuous effort to bring its membership to the number of 150,000. That it should require strenuous effort to do so reflects little credit on American Jewry, which numbers about four million. It shows how woefully lacking in imagination our people are, how incapable they are of envisaging the scale of the Jewish problem, the unfathomed depth of the abyss that threatens to engulf Jewry.

In Europe, a Jewish population approximately the size of American Jewry is threatened with extinction or with having to live under conditions that might well make death seem far preferable to life. Every port is crowded with refugees wanting to escape, needing to escape, most of them trapped without possibility of escape. And no country wants to absorb them as immigrants or to assume responsibility for their settlement as colonists. The best that can be expected, from all countries except Palestine, is a trickle of rigidly selected immigrants that are permitted, on sufferance of the local government and native population, to enter, provided they bring wealth to the country by starting new occupations and do not compete with native industry.

Note the exception of Palestine. Despite its small size, despite the politically motivated restrictions on Jewish immigration, it has been the main haven of Jewish refugee migration since the present crisis developed. But the number that Palestine has admitted is as nothing to the number that it needs to admit. We must think, not in terms of tens of thousands or of hundreds of thousands, but of millions, for millions of Jews after the war will have to find new homes. That is a necessity that will confront them not merely if —God forbid—the Axis powers win, but even if Great Britain is victorious. For it is inconceivable that, after the war, there shall be an immediate economic recovery. Consequently, the Jews of Europe will be treated as "superfluous population" that must be made to migrate. To migrate whither?

Palestine is the only country to which Jews have a historic claim. Since the issuance of the Mandate they have a legal claim as well. But that legal claim will not be worth a scrap of paper, even after the war, unless a united Jewry backs it up by vigorous political action. It was in this way that the Mandate was won after the last war. A better, not a worse, document must be won after this.

The main factor in winning for the Jewish people the opportunity to settle in Palestine the millions of Jews who need new homes must be the attitude of American Jewry, of an American Jewry that knows what it wants and is organized to ask for it. Only a large and well-disciplined Zionist membership can hope to achieve this goal for the Jewish people.

The Zionist Organization has for more than a generation been active in American life. How is it, then, that American Jewry has not rallied to the movement in greater numbers? Apparently, Zionist propaganda in America has not succeeded in awakening American Jews to their obligation to become Zionists. Perhaps its "line" was not the right one to appeal to American Jews.

The trouble with Zionist propaganda in America is that it has understated the Zionist case. Zionist propaganda rested its case mainly on secular nationalism. It made its appeal in behalf of those elements in European Jewry who could not or would not assimilate with the non-Jewish majority.

Departure From Bonaffa

She doesn't know any better. She hasn't got many pleasures besides her little husband. Yes, I understand her."

The Blums were leaving the pier; so were the others. Mrs. Ginsberg approached them. "Did you notice her new hat?" she asked Cornelia. "It's from Cortelli's!"

"Yes, I know. But I think it's a matter of taste, not of character. She's a poor little woman. And she's willing to do anything. She'll slave for him."

The ship was out of sight now. The people went home.

This made it appear perfectly legitimate for American Jews who felt they could assimilate to do so. It made it all right for those who had been taught to think of Judaism as a religion only, to feel that Zionism had no particular meaning for them. They were not necessarily antagonistic to helping those Jews who felt themselves maladjusted in the diaspora to build up a national home in Palestine, but they did not identify themselves with the enterprise, did not feel that Palestine was their national home.

Even Zionist propaganda based on Ahad Ha-am's conception of spiritual Zionism did not appeal. It made the basis of adherence to Zionism the desire to perpetuate Jewish culture. But most American Jews — "in consequence of our many sins" — have acquired no Jewish culture and hence have no interest in perpetuating it. Hebrew language and literature is as foreign to them as Greek. Hence the propaganda left them unaffected.

To appeal to American Jews, Zionist propaganda should have addressed itself to fundamental religious and ethical needs. It should have stressed the universal ideals which are implicit in the movement. This does not mean that that propaganda need soft-pedal the national aspect of Judaism, but that it should stress the relation of Jewish nationalism to universal ethical ideals and fundamental religious concepts. Above all, it should stress its relation to the ideal of democracy.

Zionism must undertake seriously the task of re-educating the Jewish people in the meaning of Jewish loyalty. Most of our Jews are decent men and women who want to do right. It requires neither a college education, nor an intensive course in Hebrew language and literature, nor initiation into a complicated and difficult ritual in order to learn the meaning of Jewish loyalty. For Jewish loyalty has no special meaning; it has only a special application. Jews have to be taught how to express Jewish loyalty in ways appropriate to the conditions of modern life.

If the minds of Jews had not been befuddled by the ideas with which influential escapists try to justify their sabotage of Jewish interests, Jews would, for example, instinctively identify themselves with the Zionist movement as the only organized effort of world Jewry to secure the survival of the Jewish people under the most favorable conditions of life.

If one of these naive and befuddled Jews were to make a request, similar to the heathen's request of Hillel, to be told, while he stands on one foot, what he must do in order to be a good Jew, our answer would be: "Identify yourself with the Jewish people and do your share to make Jewish life possible and worthwhile. This is the whole torah of Zionism; the rest is commentary; go, learn how to apply this torah." There is no doubt in our mind that if he accepts this doctrine, he will need no elaborate argument to persuade him to become a member of the Zionist Organization.

Home For Aged Experiments With Housing Able-Bodied In Apartments

Official Predicts Institutional Care Will Become Archaic

An experiment to find a means of housing the able-bodied aged in more home-like atmosphere than the institutional surroundings of an old people's home has been completed successfully by the Home for Aged and Infirm Hebrews of New York, 131 West 105th Street, according to Charles H. Freeman, president.

The substitute for the institutional life is private apartments in which elderly persons who are healthy and active enough not to need constant care and whose incomes are too small to provide adequate support are housed in small groups. The first such apartment was opened on April 1, 1939; there now are three, housing fourteen persons, and more will be opened as soon as finances permit. The annual drive of the New York and Brooklyn Federation of Jewish Charities, chief support of the home, is being conducted now and will end on Jan. 31.

"The experiment has proved definitely that apartments for the able-bodied aged are the method of the future," Mr. Freeman said. "I am willing to prophesy that fifty years from now the old-fashioned institutional care of the able-bodied aged will be looked upon as archaic and unsatisfactory as the old type of orphanage, with its careless massing of hundreds of children of all types and temperaments."

The apartments are in a modern elevator building in the West Nineties. There is no sign to indicate any connection with the Home for Aged and Infirm Hebrews. It is just a well kept, tastefully furnished apartment such as any upper middle-class family might have. Two adjoining six-room apartments have been connected. One enters a large foyer where there are a piano, a few chairs and an occasional table. On one side of the foyer is a charming living room, on the other a dining room furnished in light wood. Off the dining room there is a red-and-white-decorated kitchen with maid's room adjoining. Down the corridor are three bedrooms, furnished in maple, with studio-type beds, desks, and easy chairs. Couples occupy the double bedrooms, single persons the studio-type rooms. The third apartment, on the floor below, is similarly furnished. There are plenty of lamps, ornaments and all those little odds and ends that make an apartment homelike. Crisp curtains and chintz draperies bright-

Wins Jewish Medal

George Gordon Battle, attorney and co-chairman of the Council Against Intolerance in America, has won the medal presented annually by the American Hebrew Magazine for "the promotion of better understanding between Christian and Jew in America." Mr. Battle was chosen from sixty eminent Americans of three faiths.

Joseph H. Hilton, editor and publisher of The American Hebrew, made the announcement with the following citation: "Because he has continued unceasingly, through his activities as co-chairman of the Council Against Intolerance in America, and in public and radio addresses and in the press, to fight militantly and effectively to keep the flame of religious hatred from scarring American democracy; and because, as a result, he has done much to strengthen national unity and bring about a better understanding between Christians and Jews."

of the rooms, and plants decorate the window sills.

There are two maids and a housekeeper on the premises. There is ample space for privacy, and ample opportunity for congenial companionship. There are no institutional rules like visiting hours, or hours to come or go. The apartments are run like any well regulated private home. There are parties to which guests in the apartment may ask their friends.

The apartment project of the home was born of the depression, old-age pensions and the increasing feeling in social service agencies that there was no adequate provision for the middle-class people who had come on lean days in their old age and who, although they might be able bodied and might have some tiny income, did not have enough to maintain a decent living standard. Homes for the aged were crowded with long waiting lists.

Mrs. William Grant Lewi, who has been in charge of social service at the Home for Aged and Infirm Hebrews for eleven years, tells of the increasing number of people who came to her during the depression looking for help. "There was no room for them in the home, and there was no definite promise that if they became old, sick or feeble, there would be room for them," she says, "and these old people were worried."

Mrs. Lewi surveyed the housing situation. She found plenty of cheap furnished rooms, most of them shabby and run down, with a gas plate or "kitchen privileges." But she found nothing homelike or comfortable at the price most of her inquirers could pay.

Mrs. Lewi and Dr. M. L. Dryfus, executive director of the home, and their staff decided to ask the board if it would be possible to rent an apartment, furnish it, and charge their guests a minimum amount and have the home make up the deficit. This would leave more room in the home for the sick and bedridden patients and provide a place for those who were not sick and who could afford to pay something.

The board of the seventy-year-old home agreed to the plan. Two apartments were rented. Soon they were filled and there was a small waiting list. The third apartment was added six months later.

The home will not consider any one as an apartment guest unless he needs financial assistance. Residents of the apartments enter them with the understanding that if they become ill or feeble they will be transferred to the home. In the mean time they are paying guests in the apartments with few restrictions other than they would have in their own homes.

Composer Of Synagogue Anthems Dies

James H. Rogers, retired Cleveland music critic and composer, who wrote several anthems sung in synagogues, died at Pasadena, California, at his home. He was eighty-three years old.

Before he retired eight years ago and came to Pasadena, Mr. Rogers had been organist and musical director at the Euclid Avenue Temple in Cleveland for fifty years and music critic for "The Cleveland Plain Dealer" for seventeen years. A native of Fair Haven, Conn., he studied music in Berlin and Paris.

Mr. Rogers composed an entire service for the Jewish New Year. Among his other works were "The Star," "At Parting," "The Ninety and Nine," "The Men of Nazareth," "The New Life" and "Great Peace Have They Which Love Thy Law."

Surviving are his wife; a son, Stewart H. Rogers, and a daughter, Mrs. Marian Rogers Bickman.

Jews And Arabs Reported Eager To Defend Palestine

Assurances that the people of Palestine Jews and Arabs alike, were prepared to defend Palestine against aggression were given by Isaac Meremminski, secretary of Histadrut Jewish Labor Federation of Palestine, who came to New York to present a report to the convention of the National Labor Committee. He reported that 9,000 Jewish workers farmers, traders and intellectuals in Palestine had already volunteered for military service. This number, it was said, has been increased since the mechanized services of the British army in the Middle and Near East.

"In many settlements the composition is so great that the recruits must be eliminated by lot," Mr. Meremminski declared. "Palestine Jews are eager to join the world-wide barricades of democracy. The Histadrut has given 80 per cent. of the men now in active service.

"In preparing to defend the country against any eventualities arising from the war, Mr. Meremminski said the Jews in Palestine, of whom the Histadrut represents 120,000, who with their families compose a majority of the Jewish population, reject any proposals seeking the establishment of a dictatorship for the duration of the war.

Mr. Meremminski spoke with satisfaction of the improvement in the relations between Jews and Arabs and of the manner in which Palestine has proved able to cope with the economic problems arising from the war. He expressed gratitude for the assistance rendered to Histadrut by the American Jewish community, which has made possible extension of credits to industrial and agricultural undertakings in Palestine, expansion of health and social services, and the training of youth in productive labor for construction and for defense.

A telegram was sent to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, expressing gratitude for Mr. Green's assistance in the upbuilding of Palestine and the support of the A. F. of L. in fighting against racial and religious persecution.

Among others who addressed the convention were Nathaniel Minkoff and Sol Metz for the International Ladies Garment Workers; Louis Hollander for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and I. H. Goldberg for the Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers Union. They pledged that the trade unions represented in the convention would raise $100,000 of the $1,000,000 fund to be sought in the coming year.

Joseph Schlossberg was re-elected national chairman of the National Labor Committee for Palestine. Co-chairmen elected were Joseph Breslaw, Sarah Feder, Mr. Hollander, Alexander Kahn, Mr. Metz, Isidore Nagler, David Pinski, Alex Rose, Louis Segal and David Wertheim.

Morris Primstone was elected chairman of the administrative committee, with Max Zaritsky as treasurer, Abraham Miller assistant treasurer and Mr. Hamlin national secretary.

Fifteen hundred delegates of Jewish labor, fraternal and civic organizations attending the convention voted to raise $1,000,000 during the coming year for the support of Histadrut, Jewish Labor Federation of Palestine, as part of the upbuilding of Palestine as a Jewish national home.

The fund is to be raised among the 500,000 members of organizations affiliated with the committee.

The money to be collected for the year 1940-41 is more than double the amount raised during the past year, when $432,151 was obtained, according to a report presented to the convention by Isaac Hamlin, national secretary.

The convention adopted resolutions pledging continued support of the work of Histadrut and plans for the defense of Palestine against attack by Nazi and Fascist forces.

Germany Dumps Thousands Of Jews In France

Nazi Germany has been dumping Jews in conquered France on a large scale, according to information received by the New York Herald Tribune from a trustworthy source in Europe. A United States citizen engaged in relief work was quoted by this source as a witness to the arrival at the end of October at a concentration camp at Gurs, near Pau, of 4,000 Jews from the Palatinate in Germany.

The Jews arrived from the Reich in third-class German and Italian passenger cars. They said they had received one hour's notice to leave their homes, and had been allowed to take only their hand baggage and ten reichsmarks ($4) with them.

The first notice of their arrival given to the commandant of the concentration camp at Gurs was when their train pulled in to the local station. The camp was entirely unprepared to receive the refugees, who were forced to sleep on wooden benches without mattresses or straw. The wooden barracks of the camp are entirely unheated and unlighted. It was originally fitted up to take care of Spanish refugees, and has accommodation for 40,000 persons.

The French government, according to the same source, is obliged to pay the upkeep of the Jews exiled from France by the Nazi government. Besides those sent to Gurs, several thousand Jews have been sent to other concentration camps in France. One prefect, in Lozere, has flatly declined to accept a group of Jews consigned to his region.

The only information about this enforced resettlement of Jews which has been allowed to pass the French censorship at Vichy was a two-paragraph Associated Press dispatch sent on Nov. 15. It said the French were prepared to accept the Jews "in keeping with the spirit of the armistice agreement."

Warns Against Forces At Work To Divide Christian And Jew

Appeals for mutual understanding and cooperation among the nation's racial and religious groups and for increased support of the National Conference of Christians and Jews were heard by sixty representatives of business and banking at a luncheon held at the Bankers Club, 120 Broadway, New York.

Sponsored by Roger W. Straus, one of the national co-chairmen of the National Conference, and John S. Burke, president of B. Altman & Co.; Charles H. Tuttle, former United States Attorney, and Samuel D. Leidesdorf, philanthropist, the meeting was one of a nation-wide series for the Mobilization for National Unity campaign and the first to be held in the city's financial district.

The speakers were Basil O'Connor, lawyer and chairman of the Greater New York Committee; Dr. Everett H. Clinchy, national director of the conference, and James N. Rosenberg, Manhattan chairman of the Greater New York Committee.

Mr. O'Connor said that there "never was a time in this country when the work of the National Conference of Christians and Jews was as important as it is today. Declaring that there was "no field which we hold more dear than the field of religious freedom and culture," he asserted that there was "no doubt that in this city forces at work to divide the Christian and Jew."

"These are times when we must not permit things to happen which may destroy the ideals for which we stand," Mr. O'Connor said. "If we survey the history of time we become amazed at how brief a thing tolerance is. Almost alone among the nations of the world the doctrine of tolerance is an indigenous characteristic of our country."

To combat racial and religious intolerance, Mr. O'Connor pointed out, it was necessary to have "individual as well as organized action." Calling for his listeners to spread the ideals of tolerance, he said that "this is one of the times when we cannot permit our differences to get out of line."

Dr. Clinchy outlined the diversified racial and religious strains composing the population of the country. He warned that "after the war we must be mobilized for coming changes because the United States of America is not going to escape from the social forces loose in the world today but we hope they will be of an evolutionary nature."

Declaring that "it is necessary that we have something to say about the kind of a world our children will have to live in," Dr. Clinchy said that the "National Conference of Christians and Jews is a young organization but we think it will continue for a long time."

"This is an alive and growing and necessary work," he said. "At this particular turn in human history we are the champions of the kind of life that our forefathers gave to this country after a long struggle. It is now our turn to see that our country lives on. I trust that as you go on you will make a contribution that will help us in our work in this great city and thereby throughout this country of ours."

Mr. Rosenberg emphasized that the object of the mobilization was to gain unity and not "uniformity." He explained that "we do not believe in uniformity but we do believe in unity of purpose."

"Whatever you may be," he said, "you belong to some minority group. We make this battle today because it is a challenge to the death flung down by the dictators of Europe. Remember, in practically no place in Europe today could a round-table discussion like this be held."

Mr. Straus, who presided, introduced George Gordon Battle "as the well-known champion of human rights." Mr. Battle declared that it was "entirely essential for the men and women of the world to unite if the civilization we know is to be saved."

Mr. and Mrs. H. Yanofsky announce the approaching marriage of their daughter Hilda, to Morris, son of Mrs. A. Bier and the late A. Bier, which will take place December 25.

MARRIAGES

Batshaw-Levitt

The marriage of Rachel, daughter of B. Levitt and the late Mrs. Levitt, to Manuel Gilman Batshaw, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Batshaw, took place on the afternoon of December 12 at the bride's home, 323 Grosvenor Avenue, the Reverend Dr. H. Abramowitz of Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue officiating.

Sibales-Adelman

The marriage of Ruth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Adelman, to Maurice Sibales, son of Mrs. D. Beiss, took place on Sunday, December 15, at the home of Rev. M. Master. The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a white sheer gown on simple lines, and a finger-tip length veil. She carried a prayer book covered with gardenias and lilies-of-the-valley. Her only attendant was her sister, Miss Gertrude Adelman, dressed in blue, with matching skull cap, and carrying a nosegay of pink roses. Mac Weiner was best man. A reception followed the ceremony.

Goldstein-Shapiro

The marriage of Miss Frances Shapiro, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Shapiro, to Joseph Goldstein, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Goldstein, took place on December 15, at Bnai Jacob Synagogue, Rabbi E. Levy officiating.

A fist fight between Nazi and liberal deputies punctuated the discussions in Parliament over the introduction in Hungary of a more stringent anti-Jewish law. Police and other deputies intervened.

Christian Church Must Fight Anti-Semitism, Official Says

Anti-Semitism is spreading in the United States and should be fought resolutely by Christian churches, the Rev. John Stuart Conning, of Montclair, N.J., said in a report submitted for the consideration of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Dr. Conning, who is secretary of a joint committee of the Tome Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions, said that his study has convinced him that the influences of the Nazi ideology and "the bale-fires of hatred and persecution of Jews" are making themselves felt in the country.

"The United States has the largest Jewish population of any land," the report said. "Here in America Jews are at the peak of their experiences with references to the freedom they enjoy, the progress they have made and the influence they exert. The leadership of world Jewry is in their hands.

"What happens to these American Jews will determine the future of Jews in every other land. What their future will be depends, not upon the Jews alone, but quite as much upon the treatment they receive from their Christian neighbors.

"The Christian church dare not stand aloof and watch unmoved the ravage of a whole people. Failure to rebuke the anti-Jewish prejudice and to cultivate a Christian attitude toward the race of Jesus is a denial of the fundamental ethic of the Christian faith."

Dr. Conning's report urged sympathy and aid to Jewish refugees who have fled their home lands and sought to make new homes in America.

Her circular veil was secured by a flower corresponding to that of the bride, and she carried a bouquet of pink roses. Philip Drukarsh, brother of the groom, was best man. A dinner and reception followed, Mrs. Marlow, mother of the bride, receiving the guests in a black lace gown and American Beauty roses, and Mrs. Drukarsh, mother of the groom, in black taffeta with pink jacket, and corsage of roses. Going away, the bride travelled in a black satin and wool ensemble, with a black broadtail coat and black accessories. Mr. and Mrs. Drukarsh will live in Toronto. Out-of-town guests were: Mrs. H. Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. J. Tucker, of Cleveland, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lesnick, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. M. Cherry, Mr. and Mrs. S. Cheresnick, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Abe Simes, of Mount Vernon, N. Y.; Harold Cohen, Rochester, N. Y.; Miss Gertrude Pellis and S. Raichelson, Buffalo, New York; Harry Davis, Windsor, Ontario; Mr. and Mrs. A. Fress and Mr. and Mrs. D. Rosenman, of Kitchener, Ontario.

HURLBUT SHOES

We cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of correct shoes for children. Poor posture, nervous conditions, and many other later life ailments have been traced to badly shod feet in early years. We recommend the HURLBUT SHOE for children because it is scientifically designed. It "exercises" the growing foot. It develops the foot the way Nature intended. Only the genuine HURLBUT bears the famous crest shown here.

Why Install GAS Heating?

Toronto homes both large and small are now heated by gas the modern house-heating fuel. Their owners are enjoying a comfort which, a few short years ago, would have been beyond the reach of moderate incomes.

To-day, improved equipment and more favourable rates have brought the advantages of gas house-heating within easier reach. For many a family the question now is not "Can we afford it?" but rather, "Can we afford not to have it?"

How often do we say that the best is the cheapest in the end! Surely this is true of house-heating for, if the best can protect the family's health, may not its actual cost be very low indeed?

Gas, the ideal house-heating fuel, burns with a clean, steady flame and is entirely free from soot and smoke. No dirt, oily film or smudge—common with other heating fuels. A clean fuel means a clean home. You and your family will breathe cleaner air—untainted by dirt and odours. Curtains, drapes and wall-papers retain their freshness longer. House-cleaning costs are reduced and work is far easier.

Only gas heating provides such healthful cleanliness and such steady, unfluctuating warmth under perfect control.

Wives appreciate automatic gas heat because it is so clean and comfortable—saving hours a week formerly spent in cleaning and dusting and ending the need for constant furnace tending.

Husbands find that with fully automatic gas heat they can sleep longer in the morning, yet get up to a warm house, and they know that all day long the family will enjoy cozy comfort.

Illustrated is one of the latest types of gas burners which are now used to "convert" ordinary furnaces to burn gas.

May we measure your home and supply you an estimate of the cost of heating it by gas? Without obligation, of course. In every way GAS is the care-free fuel. We light the furnace in the fall and turn it off in the spring without expense to you. You need never think of fuel supply or delivery.

Mrs. Reuben Rodness is convenor of the concert, and the silver collection proceeds will aid the Child Refugee Clothing Depot.

The Troubles We've Seen

By Sara Zadkin, of the Toronto Jewish Family Welfare Bureau

(Real names are not used here.)

December means snow and skating and fur coats to some people. To Mr. Goldenberg it means coal. How was he going to get it? How long could he go on without it?

Last winter and for several winters before that, Mr. Goldenberg, a carpenter, had been unemployed. The public Relief Department had supplied him with coal, as well as with other needs. But this winter he had work at last, work at fifteen dollars a week that provided his family with only enough for bare essentials of food, shelter and clothing. But the providing of heat was a problem Mr. Goldenberg could not solve.

Together Mr. and Mrs. Goldenberg sat down to talk it over. If he had started working earlier in the summer he would have established his credit and perhaps some coal company would be willing to trust him, although goodness knows how they would meet the payments, even at that. Probably by skimping on the food. But since he had only started in October no coal dealer would trust him and he didn't know how long his job would last.

There seemed to be no way out until he thought of the Jewish Family Welfare Bureau. He talked to the caseworker, and together they drew up a list of his expenses which amounted to as much as his wages. The coal was therefore provided. To quote Mr. Goldenberg, "It's like a mountain rolled off my back."

A pioneer newspaper paid small salaries, but this editor-to-be PLANNED for his future

His first stake in the future cost only 67¢ a week

This is the true story of a man who left cub reporting in the East to become a member of the editorial staff on a Western newspaper. He is now recognized as one of Canada's truly great editors. When he was 21 years of age, he bought a 10-Pay Life policy for $1000 with The Mutual Life of Canada. It cost him only $34.72 annually . . . but while he was building for the future it assured him this protection, and, as the panel at the right shows, valuable dividends, too! He is now the owner of several Mutual Life policies.

The same good judgment and spirit of determination that prompted him to plan for his future and to carry through his plans account for his success in the business world.

Get the plan you need!

This story is typical of the thousands of far-sighted Canadians who have planned their futures with The Mutual Life. You too can secure exactly the right plan to suit your special circumstances. You may prefer the advantages of a 10, 15 or 20-Pay Life policy, or an Endowment or a Pension policy to assure a steady income when you retire . . . and there are other special needs that can be provided for best by a "tailor-made" Mutual Life Plan. Check the coupon below and send it to The Mutual Life of Canada, Waterloo, Ontario, right away.

Learn how this 71-year-old institution can help make YOUR future secure. Remember, Mutual means "mutual" . . . 165,000 policyholders own The Mutual Life . . . all the profits go to policyholders!

How a wise investor tripled his money!

Annual premium of $34.72
Premiums (less dividends before policy paid up).	$324.93
What this policyholder gets for his investment in total cash received or available	$1,175.65

Thus $324.93 gave 53 years' protection of $1,000.00 and returned (in dividends and present guaranteed cash value) the sum of $1,175.65 —or a net gain of $850.72!

The above is a definite case history. We do not guarantee you will get the same results, for dividends must be commensurate with changing conditions. But in any event all Mutual's profits go to its policyholders—the only owners of the company.
